

"Fashionistas For Life" head to Costa Rica this June, Merging Fashion With Philanthropy and Give Poverty the Boot.

This summer, FAR OUT KIDS and iconic fashion designers will join up with Roma Boots' Samuel Bistran to deliver rubber boots and clean water systems to the indigenous Ngäbe people of Central America.

All is part of a documentary entitled "Children of the Coffee" produced by Academy and Emmy Award winning producer Gray Frederickson. The documentary is inspired by an article in Fem World Magazine on the incredible photo journalist Michele Zousmer. This same article introduced us to the children of the Ngäbe, and to their guardian angel of 30 years, Dr. Pablo Ortiz.

A group of fashionistas will travel to Panama and Costa Rica to follow the annual migration this indigenous tribe. They will deliver rubber boots to the children, set up solar panel water filtration systems along the way, and stage a Musical Fashion Show in Panama City and San Jose to raise funds for the children. At the end of this month, Ashton Theiss and Danielle Murphree will travel to San Vito for a boot drop and exploratory trip for the future production.

The ladies will be led by the Treasure of San Vito, Dr. Ortiz. When they asked what can we bring you, he unequivocally answered, "Rubber Boots and Clean Water!" He added, "The rubber boots keep parasites from entering the blood stream of the children and traveling to the brain...and clean water is essential to health."
